Dear Dr. Madorin,

I am emailing you today with a review of Avinash Thadani. I am aware that he is under evaluation in the fall. To start off, my name is Emily Barnett and I have complete two years at Georgian College in the Bachelor of Science in Nursing program and I will be continuing to York University in September. I have had four classes with Avinash as the professor. My first two classes were Anatomy and Physiology 1 and Anatomy and Physiology 2 in the first year of the program. My third and fourth classes were Processes of Human Disease 1 and Processes of Human Disease 2 (online) in the second year of the program. Avinash was the best teacher I have had in my two years at Georgian. Many of my friends, and myself included, deliberately chose our course sections to ensure we had Avinash as our professor. He is passionate about his job and fosters the learning of his students in several different ways. The course content he provides his student addresses several different learning styles such as hands on learning with interactive displays of human muscles/bones, for visual learners he provides diagrams and lecture videos, he also provides comprehensive powerpoint slide shows in three different formats for textbook learners. We are always given learning outcomes and textbook readings to take our knowledge to the next level by applying what we learn. His tests and exams are fair and focus on what we learn by challenging us to think outside of the box. I had two different experiences in his classes by taking part in the in class lecture format, as well as a strictly online class. Each style of class encouraged us to take initiative in our learning but still guided us with resources catering to the needs of a variety of learning types. Avinash is easy to get a hold of via email or in his office, and he is there for us if we are unclear on a topic or want to further our learning with new resources he came across. He also constantly looks for ways to integrate new medical information by creating his own case studies or with information from his brother who is a cardiac surgeon. In order to stay current with what is in the media we would talk about different things we heard such as the Ebola outbreak or the Zika virus and how we can prepare in Canada to better our understanding as nursing students. Avinash is a prime example of what we as students look for in our faculty members and I believe Georgian is extremely lucky to have such a passionate and dedicated member of the school of Health and Wellness. If you have any further questions I am available by email and would be more than happy to respond.

Thank you for your time,
Emily Barnett
